each man is a private world. a world bounded by intimacy, expressions, and destinies. the way of his destiny is a lone journey, caught up in unique decisions and significant choices. his choices have the importance of planets. each decision fostering a galaxy. today's single choice leading to a greater life style. his ultimate maneuvers formulate his final identity.

along the continuum of his life style occasions another person who, noting his solitude, joins in a friendship, thus becoming more human than before.

*others live in obscurity; yet theirs is not a hollow word, not a vain gesture.
each man offers a piece of mosaic in the work of art, collectively called humanity.*

*each man is bound for greatness. greatnesses of all variations leading ultimately to the utopian ideal . . .
self-fulfillment.*

each greatness is often won by private tragedy and some pathos. leaving remnants of his books and arts and technicianships, a man dies. but not insignificantly.

having gone does not preclude having lived.

LAMPAS 1970 offers a view of the each of us,

through the all of us, hoping to create an insight into this private world.

respectfully, we begin.

this unique world emanates in class seminar discussions, voicing varying opinions of vibrance and thought. its reflection is seen in myriad selections.

its onliness is seen on faces on faces set at thought, in grimace, groan and triumph. its variance comes in emotional outbursts of apathy and moderacy.

*this uniqueness is as diverse as a class of thirty or a faculty of hundreds. this entity, this man, this work of organic art, of brains and new cells. it is one whole.
forming one identity—me.*

identity is a fine word. it connotes a self-concept of force with direction: of pride with simplicity. if man's conception of personal identity encircles people into his world, so much more is his world fulfilling. interesting is the self-knowledgeable man. after stereotyping, communicating, dehumanizing and computerizing, he is a rarity.

however, identity does not displace socialization. man lives a symbiotic existence. bringing his uniqueness to each relationship, lest his life be insular, he creates a unity among men. this oneness becomes a dependency of freedom, of solitude without loneliness, each feeds on the life blood of fellowship, each interweaves a thread from solitary ways to a community.

academic communities are of a specialized genre. they have a homogenous nature. axiomatically we are literate, of moderate intelligence, educationally-oriented. variations along this dimension are myriad. consumption of literature, art, music, histories, and biology unite our minds momentarily. between thinking, we study.

we study ourselves for one thing. we wonder why we are so alienated or so diverse, we form a world of private import and individual interests. this entity of notice may be of silence or spirit. notice itself being arbitrary. incognito on campus, significantly alive, is a viable belief.

yet there are those whose interest is chaotically loud. its sound reverberates in sports, cafeterias, in politics. both are not disparate. the loud become silenced, the quiet become verbal. it all contributes to the totality of excellence.

tragedy breeds excellence. it strengthens the moral commitment of renewing oneself. tragedy follows a continuum of small disappointments to major tragedies; external forces acting upon some; internal quests suffocating others.

enmeshed in man is an act of such profound excellence he may strive all his life to recapture its glory.

in the striving is his greatness revitalized. "becoming" is the essence, yet greatness has its open moment. it may come in frustration or in glory, it may come in a final exam, or a course grade. recognition is slow, but magnificent. sometimes magnificence comes shrouded in suffering, even in this, a new strength emerges.

this year the focus on the individual has brought a new change into the faculty section. the editorial staff has chosen three members of the community to represent the whole faculty and administration. chosen on the basis of illustrating our thematic approach to the world within each person; each contributes vitally to an aspect of the humaneness of the college.

dean kelly, describing himself as a middle-age college administrator, asks, "what is relevant?" and with this outburst, he begins to unravel a life full of relevancy. suddenly the john kelly image (gruff warmth, casual swearing) has become camp. his whole thing is synthesis. the synthesis of two generations' gaps, seeking identity and integrity. his own integrity is one of blunt challenge, he sees himself as "an individual within a society of mass-hypnosis." (he won't grow sideburns, he's doing his own thing.)

his admonition "to know what you want within realistic limits of your capabilities, and then do it." (and do it the best you can) seems old-school but the wry look, the sardonic air is vibrantly new. ("ah, that sounds trite," he'll say.) but john kelly is far from it.

"i work at myself." john solin grins with his affable warmth. he seeks to find one's response through the eyes. his intuitive eyes notice each gesture, not to make one uncomfortable but to see you. he listens well too. here is a fine person becoming a finer person.

first of all there is this warmth that takes on force, this gentleness which merges with masculinity. his serenity (which is never always serene, for most of all the search goes on) forms an alliance and his company is trance-like. he is saying there are only two of us in the world and we are taking time for coffee. the pure miracle in this enchantment is that it is true of each person he spends time with.

mostly solin recalls a sense of peace in a time of tumult. his objectivity which sees most short comings; conversely, never judges any. he is bright and articulate, open and changing. the charisma of all these gifts does not seem to lessen the true self-knowledge. he has accepted himself at last and wanting each one of us to do likewise; he takes the time to listen to us find our own selves.

richard tyrell is a literate, responsive man. his blend of understanding and compassion has produced a sensitively-attuned person. tyrell creates an aura of warm understanding and individual regard from initial impression to further understanding. thoreau-like in his sense of asceticism, he combines the idea with the action necessary to a world commitment. avoiding the cliché-worn philosophic term "love" as a guiding life philosophy his ideals are neither simply ethical nor religious but a synthesis of the two. his aspirations are sensitive to youth's ferment: youth has seen, has responded, and will change. but temper this dynamism with a sense of humor, flavor it with optimism, he warns us. one can see richard tyrell has lived by his own precepts, for like his admonition he has the vision, the response-ability and the mutability to be continuously growing.

junior week merged into a potpourri of prom gowns and rock music and absurd costumes, each variety of expression created a warmth that seeped into the spirit of the weekend, leaving all with a sense of delicious memory.

symbols have a way of presenting themselves throughout life. they may be spiritual signs, status figure-heads or visual symbols. the cap and gown ceremony is a visual percept of an academic commitment.

somewhere
between the visual percept of the gown and our new leaders
and our reality facing us that this, yes, was senior year.
somewhere in our own abysses of wonderment and privacy and search
and most of all this search for something that was our own (and only ours) we emerged, unified somewhat by our upperclassmen status and the finalty of our last years (the others having been given up in experimentation, tasting our strength) this year 1970 became real for us.
it became as real as our job interviews and our graduate records and our student teaching and our mistakes (oh, and our mistakes)
we rejected people and ideas and were liberalized and conserved and opened and we closed ourselves because we had become afraid of our own vulnerability. (our freshman days having been spent in the bliss of ignorance.) but mostly the growing sounds of our minds and our grasps for thoughts that were not yet even real
all of it all of it
became our senior year.
our last aspiration here.
our only promise for tomorrow's wisdom was yesterday's follies, re made.

*this year. 1970. our year. our extracurricular activities merged with our course curricula, life, existence all merged into our education.
there is no separateness between the
in/out/around/because of/college activities.*

there were moments when we stood strongly, passionate, and yet we hoped to remain at least human. it is hard to be critical and gentle, firm and strong, sensitive and attuned to the individual, at times we didn't make it. we were anxious and young and anxious and sometimes we worked well together. and sometimes we didn't. we failed and we will try again and as it all merges and flows and we become a circular people. (but may our mistakes at least be new ones.)

margaret mead, this year's most prominent speaker, resolved the generation gap with warmth, humor and intellectualism. the event sponsored by the sociology club, was magnificently thronged; each student bringing a piece of cultural and social awareness to the discussion and lecture.

the mind and body merge to complete the unity of man. without one of these operating properly (can one separate the two?) the other suffers. the winner of the race is joyous; the losers educated. all win in a sort of way. each sport reflects a unity of body and intellect. the loneliness of a long distance runner is in sharp contrast to the hockey squadron's ferocious cohesion; yet each sport adds to the variety of physical expressions. the physicalness and the exhilaration of competition teach lessons of patience, fortitude, and endurance. having spent the body, the mind savors the cleaner air, the cooler refreshments of water and oranges.

this year's basketball team tasted splendid victories, egalitarian pride, surprise endings.

*a season's end brings with it the roots of a

the verve and dynamism of the women's recreation association is reflected in the flamboyance of a cheerleader or in the quick, reflexive movements of a basketball player. the truly feminine woman is both a physical and social person, unassuming enough to don the gym smock or the bermuda shorts or the gown with equal facility.

lampas 1970 is a disjunctive poem-photo-prose medium for the purpose of commemorating, commiserating, communicating this year, four years, a life style. its attempt to synthesize an art conception, a philosophic conception has left disjointed ends, random thoughts, major abstractions. yet its style is germinal at least. the creation of an organic whole of copy and photo is its primary end.

dear reader,

this is the last page. and to you it's only page 312. to me it's arlene with black circles under her eyes, mrs. d. feeding us intravenously, dr. john (santosuosso) telling us we're doing fine (a necessary myth).

i don't understand what editors are supposed to say on this page except maybe thank you. because i have so many people to thank I'm only going to thank a few monumental workers. arlene, who is going to marry joey in august, I thank you. (also jeanette who sharpened pencils for us all night and stuck out her tongue when our own got too tired to lick labels for pictures.)

and dr. john and your (gourmet) wife a word of warm gratitude for your personal interest, for your understanding that a student publication should indeed be just that.

and lastly my family who said i never should have taken it on, patience for all the meals i missed.

much warmth to each of/all of you, ce ce iandoli
